offer professional guided hunts. After much encouragement and insistence from family and friends, his dream became a reality when Macon County Outfitters, LLC offered its first hunt in November 2007. Prior to opening his own guiding business, Matt had several years experience working as a professional guide and traveling internationally to guide hunts in New Zealand. "My dreams are no different than anyone else's. I have always loved hunting and thought it would be neat to take my family's land and transform it into a hunting farm."

Macon County Outfitters offers various hunting packages for whitetail deer, continental pheasant and spring turkey hunts. "We have some of the best hunting ground and leases in the business. If you can imagine the habitat, we have it. From open country rolling hills with brushy draws, to loaded hardwood timbers," said Matt.

All of the deer hunts are 100 percent fare chase and free range. "With our extensive food plot system, our properties give the bucks the nutrition they need throughout the year to allow them to grow the mass, tine length, and spread to be real trophies." Hunters can choose between guided or semi-guided deer hunts.

Continental pheasant hunts are composed of 25 to 50 hunters with 14 pheasants released per shooter for that day. "On a hunt with 35 shooters they would be looking at 490 pheasants released that day to hunt on the tower style shoot along with highly trained pointing dogs. Also, our habitat is the best in the business. Milo and corn fields, native grasses, and edge feathered draws and fence rows make up the majority of our habitat," said Matt.

Hunting packages include accommodations, meals prepared by Matt's mother Lisa Shoemaker, meat and trophy preparation and transportation during hunts. The lodge can accommodate up to 50 people and is equipped with a fully staffed kitchen, TV area and pool table.

Guest Commentary
Spend Broadband Money With Care
by Richard Telthorst

As hopeful applicants around the country scramble to take advantage of more than $7 billion in federal stimulus funds to expand the reach of the Internet, policymakers both in Missouri and Washington need to watch carefully how the money will be spent. Taking a "ready, fire, aim" approach without good planning could waste taxpayer dollars without bringing better Internet access.

The federal stimulus program to improve high-speed Internet service (known as "broadband") already has attracted more than 2,200 applicants looking for nearly $28 billion — more than four times the amount allocated by Congress. In Missouri, more than 60 applicants have filed plans to spend more than $1 billion on projects across the state.

Among those plans is an ambitious idea to build 2,500 miles of additional "middle-mile" broadband network. That's the infrastructure pipeline for delivering Internet access, but it doesn't include the connections directly to homes and small businesses, known as the "last mile." This plan also would give the state of Missouri access to a portion of the network to carry government Internet traffic.

general manager Jim Simon

State government's partnership in this private sector project could potentially hinder additional fiber deployment by telecommunications providers in the state. Local Internet providers would be harmed if the new network were used to provide access to some providers in competition with others, or to bypass private providers and serve their customers directly. Dozens of telecommunications companies have invested millions of dollars in private capital to build a robust broadband network reaching all corners of the state.

More private investment is pending to expand this network even further. But using a state network to undercut or overbuild private Internet providers or to subsidize the operations of particular providers would reduce the incentives that the private sector has to expand services. It's not the way public money should be spent — especially money that is in short supply given the number of competing projects.

A recent industry study points out that the "middle mile" networks built in Missouri by telecommunications providers, cable companies, electric cooperatives and others already have an extensive reach. A more detailed study of this network in Missouri should be undertaken before federal funds are invested. State government, using federal stimulus funds, should lead this mapping effort. Further network deployment to extend the "last mile" of Internet connections to more-distant customers is driven by demand. Demand depends on customers understanding the value of a broadband connection and having a computer to connect to the Internet.

Federal stimulus money also is available to finance projects to establish public computing centers, educate and train people in computer skills, and help create the demand needed for further private sector investment.

These projects may not garner as much media attention as do "shovel-ready" plans to string more fiber across the state, but they are critical in bringing more broadband access to Missouri.

Customer Comments Remembering When with W. R. (Bob) Harris

W. R. (Bob) Harris from Salisbury remembers the day he signed up to become one of the first Chariton Valley shareholders in 1950. "I was working at my grocery store in Thomas Hill when Herschel McCloud and Harman Minks stopped by and asked me to become a member. I paid my $5.00 dues, but it wasn't until the late 50's that I actually received telephone service."

At that time, other large telephone companies were already well established in the nation's cities and growing suburban areas, but most were not interested in serving sparsely populated rural areas without imposing expensive line-extension charges. The unfulfilled need for telephone service led dedicated civic minded individuals, like Mr. McCloud and Mr. Minks, in the community to join together to develop, finance and build their own telephone systems.

Bob has several fond memories associated with the early days of Chariton Valley Telephone. "Back in 1955 when I owned a DX filling station in Salisbury, the girls at the Chariton Valley office would take calls and messages for me. It was really the only way customers could get ahold of me. At that time, my phone number was 10." "When Chariton Valley first started offering television service in Salisbury, I tried really hard to become the first customer, but it didn't work out," he laughed. Mr. Harris served as mayor in Salisbury for 10 years and is a retired funeral director from Berry Funeral Home. He was married to Mary E. Harris for 65 years.

2010 directory photo chosen at Annual Meeting

Mrs. Norma Jones from New Cambria submitted the 2010 Directory Cover photo which was selected in a close vote at Chariton Valley's Annual Meeting recently held in Salisbury. The image shows a birdhouse in a flower garden overlooking the cattle pasture surrounding her home.

Butterflies and hummingbirds are attracted to nearby gardens which include flowers that bloom most of three seasons. Her husband, Eldon, built the birdhouse from scraps then stained it the color of their home. Bluebirds and sparrows have found a home there.

She is excited to have her photo selected for the Directory Cover and will certainly enjoy using the camera which she received as the prize.

Make life safer Keep the cord

When it comes to helping your family stay safe during emergencies, it may be a smart call to keep the cord. Landline – or corded – phones work in power outages. Experts say that makes them one of the best ways to call for help or to simply stay in touch with people when bad weather or other emergencies hit. Additionally, the lines are instantly traceable, meaning emergency personnel can locate someone who calls 911 for help, even if he or she is unable to speak.

Also, landlines can help save families money. Chariton Valley offers discounts when services such as Internet or VisionNet are combined or “bundled” with landline service. Of course you do not need to pay for cable or Internet to use a corded phone – a key difference between landlines and “digital” phone or (VoIP) service. These services require a broadband Internet connection to function, possibly adding to a household's costs but also meaning that when Internet service goes down, the digital phones no longer work.

With Chariton Valley you always have unlimited local usage for every call you make or receive, regardless of the time of day. Our local area includes all eighteen exchanges in parts of five counties and extends from east of Jacksonville to west of Hale, and as far north as New Boston to Forest Green in the south. Moreover, Chariton Valley customers in Macon may be called toll free from anywhere in the eighteen exchanges. Please refer to the front of your phone directory for more details on the local calling area.

Keeping the landline phone does not mean you should give up your wireless phone. Perhaps the Federal Communications Commission summed it up best in a recent report stating, “A balanced choice is often the best one – a combination of landline and wireless phone use may be the right choice for you.”

Chariton Valley's wireline phone service is extremely reliable and the quality sound makes staying in touch even more enjoyable. Conference calling is available through Chariton Valley and is a very useful and convenient service when you need to speak with people at two or more locations.

HIGH SPEED INTERNET

Add video to your BIG family conference calls

You may want to try video conferencing and experience a face to face conversation with friends and family who can't make it home for the holidays. This 'Jetson' style form of keeping in touch requires a Chariton Valley wireline service to connect you to our High Speed internet. Plus, you will need to add a webcam, instant messaging and a desktop microphone or headset to your personal computer or laptop to complete the equipment requirements. It is a good idea to have everything set up prior to the holidays, so you are ready to connect with your family and friends.

Share family photos online

Online photo albums provide yet another way for you to share holiday traditions. Simply upload your digital pictures to an album right from your camera to your computer. You can view each other's pictures just minutes after they're posted.

Even if you don't own a digital camera, you can still create online photo albums. Just take your film to a photo processor and ask for your pictures to be put on CD. The CD stores digital versions of your pictures so that you can view them on a computer. From the CD, you can upload the photographs to an online album and share them with your family and friends.

On-line Holiday Cards or emails

Telecommunications pioneer answers final call

After graduating in 1947 from Newman High School of Sweetwater, Texas, Truman Lee (John) Selmon,

Mr. Truman Lee (John) Selmon
former Chariton Valley General Manager.

former Chariton Valley Telephone Corporation General Manager, worked for the local Sears & Roebuck and tried out for a minor league baseball team in Texas. Even though the fledgling 6 foot 6 first baseman made the roster of the AA club, he decided to stick with what he was doing in 1949, working on a line crew in the Southwest. He saw more of a future in telecommunications and saw rural telecommunications from many perspectives spanning five decades ending with his retirement in August 2000 from Ringgold Telephone Company in Ringgold, Georgia.

From 1960-1976, Selmon served as General Manager of the Chariton Valley Telephone Corporation in Bucklin, Missouri. Under his CVTC management, this organization grew from 4000 to 6500 subscribers and was the first in Missouri to convert to all one party service and the first to install and market improved mobile telephone service, for which the National Telephone Cooperative Association (NTCA) of Washington, D.C., presented Selmon its Management Achievement Award. While at CVTC, he was elected to the NTCA Board of Directors and served for 12 years. In 1964, Selmon was elected Region VIII Director to the NTCA national board where he played a significant role in establishing a new NTCA headquarters on Pennsylvania Avenue in D.C. He also served as E. Ritter Telephone Company General Manager in Marked Tree, Arkansas.

In 1983, Selmon returned to the private co-op sector, becoming General Manager of Ringgold Telephone Company and in 1986 was promoted to Executive Vice-President, retiring from the independent telephone company in 2000. Truman Lee (John) Selmon, entered his eternal rest on July 31, 2009, at the Summerhill Senior Community Home in Perry, Georgia.

From the Kitchen of Elna Williams

Elna was born and raised in New Cambria and lives on a fourth generation family farm in the New Cambria area. After teaching instructional media for 33 years in Davenport, Iowa, Elna relocated back to New Cambria.

"During my teaching career, I worked as a supervisor in an Iowa Communications Network Classroom, so every time I hear Chariton Valley mention IPTV service, I automatically think 'Iowa Public TV!,'" said Elna.

Elna has four grandsons and enjoys researching genealogy. She is a member of DAR, Macon County Retired School Personnel and Daughters of Union Federation of the Civil War. She also holds a doctorate in Educational Administration.

"I received this recipe from friends in Moline, Illinois who would make it for their annual church fundraiser. They would make it in every possible flavor. It's so good and easy to prepare."

Touching Lives A Chariton Valley Tradition

Chariton Valley's 2009 Annual Meeting was built around the theme of "Touching Lives" and continued the tradition of being a festive event with something of interest for everyone. Although primarily a business meeting designed to provide shareholders a voice in the operation of Chariton Valley, it is carried out in a festival-like environment. The beautiful fall day could not have produced better weather as the temperature hovered around 80 degrees and a mild breeze kept everyone comfortable. A regular schedule of golf carts shuttled guests from the parking lots to the registration area, where gifts, meal tickets and ballots were distributed. The use of bar code readers prevented lines from forming at the registration tables and most attendees were in the food serving line within minutes of their arrival.

Attendees enjoyed dinner prepared by the Salisbury Booster Club before the start of the business meeting.

In keeping with tradition, large tents were set up to provide protection from the sun, and ample seating was available for members and guests to enjoy their meal in relaxed comfort. A meal consisting of bar-b-que pork, ham, and all the trimmings, was prepared by the Salisbury Boosters Club and served by Chariton Valley employees and Salisbury students. New to this year's event was music supplied by "The Back Row", a DJ service of Junebugg Productions. The DJ's, including David Grammer, Kyle Harvey and David Snarr interacted with the crowd and kept everyone entertained until time for the meeting to start.

Many members visited the Technology Fair and took advantage of the opportunity to examine Chariton Valley's latest selection of wireless phones and to discover new and exciting features about them. The Technology Fair also provided an opportunity to experience various forms of electronic exercise with a Wii. The Wii was popular with kids of all ages and at the conclusion of the Annual Meeting was given away as a door prize. Back for the second year in a row was the super computer designed and built by Chariton Valley's Chris Barger. By super cooling the computer, Chris has been able to achieve incredibly high-speed.

An area was set aside for the many children who accompanied their parents to the Annual Meeting and they were able to take part in a variety of games. Plus, rides were available on "Teley the Truck", Chariton Valley's miniature parade vehicle. Sno-cones helped off-set the heat of the warm September afternoon and other refreshments, including hotdogs and nachos, were also available.

The real purpose of the event, the business meeting, was called to order by Cheryl Long, president of the Board of Directors. Jim Simon, general manager, reported on the decline in access lines and discussed the construction of additional cell towers. The major order of business at this year's annual meeting was the election of three directors to the Board. Each candidate addressed the audience prior to the vote being called. When the votes were counted it was determined that all three incumbents had been re-elected to three year

The 16 year old high school student from Macon has been honored by playing with district and conference bands, the Missouri State Jazz Band, and the Coleman-Hawkins All-Star Band. Cody has been awarded exceptional and superior ratings for solo performances at District and State competitions. His future plans include studying jazz perforprogram and will be invited to represent Chariton Valley at various public events in 2010. Kelley Cupp, the first runner up, is a senior at Marceline High School where she is a member of the high school band and is the drum majorette for the marching band. Kelley is the 2009 homecoming queen at Marceline. The third place finisher was Sheila Davis of Salisbury. Sheila is employed at the University Hospital in Columbia as a Radiologic Technologist.

One of the most anticipated events at previous annual meetings has been the selection of the directory photo contest winner and this year's event was no exception. The members expressed their preferences by applauding for their favorite photos and the winner was Mrs. Norma Jones from New Cambria. The winning photograph, pictured on page 10, will appear on the cover of the 2010 Chariton Valley directory. Plus, Mrs. Jones received a digital camera. The grand prize, $1,000 worth of Chariton Valley service, was won by Rodney & Kathey Harmon of Salisbury. A complete list of prize winners are listed in the right border.
